Huatulco, in Oaxaca, is one of the favorite destinations for national and international tourists to vacation between historical sites, virgin beaches, ecological reserves, coffee plantations, unique gastronomy and hidden paradises, it is the ideal escape for the most demanding sybarites from anywhere in the world. In a complex of luxury villas, Montecito proposes an experience that beyond offering a resort type escape, proposes the creation of a community with spectacular amenities, where visitors and residents can relax and feel at home, enjoying all of them. comfort. This is how you live in Montecito Beach Village.

The architectural plan, designed by the Mexican architect Diego Villaseñor, combines a concept based on respect for nature, where the jungle subtly intertwines with the structure of the complex.

Each villa has between three and five bedrooms, outdoor bathrooms, an infinity pool, a large kitchen, an entertainment room and more. The common areas are located in privileged areas that promote the sense of community.

Each villa consists of three to five rooms and all offer the same paradisiacal experience.

The rooms have large terraces and indoor and outdoor bathrooms, allowing an authentic experience in contact with nature.

The Cala Club is located on the shores of the private beach, and has a restaurant and a saltwater pool that illuminates at night thanks to the optical fibers that seem to blend in with the stars. Located on the upper grounds, the Loma Lounge has one of the most privileged views of the Huatulco coast. Boasting a semi-Olympic pool and a plenty of space to share with friends and family.

"Architecture has to do with the art of living and of building the best habitat for that life," said Diego Villaseñor. His passion for the balance between light and shadow and his love for nature, inspired the designs within the complex, from the fishbone pergolas, the wooden shutters, the palapa roofs and even the use of wooden bridges as main access to each Villa. "Diego has used his unique abilities to create the Montecito concept, a retreat where the power of the sea, the land and the air are channeled by the mastery of a true artist," said Greg Glassman, director of Montecito.

Throughout the complex you can see different art works by the Mexican sculptor Adán Paredes, who describes Montecito as a dream come true and "the most beautiful pearl of the Mexican Pacific".

To date there are 15 completed and occupied Villas, and seven more that have recently been added to their inventory. The Villas are available for sale or for rent and designed for intermittent and permanent travelers. Between the tropical jungle, the unique views, the coastal architecture and the countless amenities, the reasons to love Montecito are truly endless.
